On the cover: A Center for Literacy workshop to support paraprofessionals who work with people in the autism community of Chicago.

Dear supporters, partners, and friends,

Thank you for your commitment to UIC's Center for Literacy throughout 2024!

We continued our work supporting Chicago communities and families. We reflected on more than 30 years of service as well as our current efforts to refine our mission and vision for the future.

In 2024, we secured and stewarded over $2 million in grant funding to directly support Chicago communities and families.

Our Professional Development team served 130 early childhood educators through learning circles and workshops. These trainings support emerging and established professionals to deepen their skills and work effectively with parents and children in Chicago Early Learning sites.

Our Resource Center for Autism and Developmental Delays (RCADD) served 399 participants through autism-focused workshops and consultations. We facilitated over 8,000 visits to RCADD's virtual and onsite Resource Rooms, which allow parents and educators to take home resources to use with the children in their lives.

Our Parent and Youth Outreach team provided 70 workshops on topics ranging from family literacy to employment readiness. We led six cohorts for fathers through our 24/7 Dads program, which supports fathers of young children with community and learning to improve their parenting skills.

We revitalized our Adult Education Program and began with 13 participants in 2024. We look forward to these learners earning their GEDs in 2025, as well as welcoming new learners to the program.

We consolidated all of our locations to our central office on UIC's campus to allow us to collaborate and increase our impact in Chicago neighborhoods.

We look forward to deepening our impact in 2025. Thank you for your partnership and continued support!

Andrea Vaughan
Interim Director

In 2024, we revised our mission and vision to more clearly reflect our work.

We envision a world where families are at the center of their communities and in charge of their educational futures.

We teach families to access strengths within themselves and to connect with available resources to build thriving communities.

Center for Literacy

OUR PROGRAMS

Adult Education
The Center for Literacy supports adults in their efforts to advance their education and access employment opportunities through our GED program and workforce development services.

Parent and Youth Outreach (PYO Program)
We work with parents in our family literacy, financial literacy and fatherhood/parenting programs.

Resource Center for Autism and Developmental Delays (RCADD Program)
RCADD supports parents and educators of children with autism and other developmental delays through professional development, one-on-one coaching and access to our resource library.

Professional Development and Family Engagement
We support early childhood educators and emerging providers through one-on-one coaching, learning circles and workshop programming.

GED Program
The Center for Literacy is deepening its commitment to adult education through a revitalized GED program. Over the past 30 years, CFL has successfully graduated more than 400 GED students, and is now bringing back this vital opportunity for adult learners on Chicago's South and West sides to gain small-group and one-on-one instruction in pursuit of their high school equivalency degrees.

The program is entirely free to participants and is taught by a team of instructors that includes UIC College of Education graduate students and former GED program participants who understand these learners' needs and experiences, because they have been there themselves. The Center for Literacy partners with local schools, community organizations, and the UIC Neighborhood Center Initiative to envision the GED program as part of an educational pathway for Chicago residents to access education, connect to employment opportunities, and achieve their goals. In this way, the Center for Literacy is one very important way the College of Education and UIC show up in Chicago neighborhoods.
